Seed mixtures for vibrant flower fields

Beneficial insects have been the subject of much public interest in recent years, with discussions taking place across various channels. One of the most important issues in these discussions was the lack of suitable habitat for many insects, or its total absence. Nectar-rich flowering plants are a particularly important source of sustenance for many insects. These have become scarce in the agricultural landscape, reducing the habitat available for nectar-collecting insects. The design of many gardens has also changed in comparison to previous decades, offering less habitat for insects than they used to.

Feldsaaten Freudenberger created the ReNatura® product line, which offers numerous flower mixtures for different purposes on the market. The goal of the product line is to provide the right seed mixtures for a variety of nature-like habitats. Flower mixtures are the main focus of this offering, and they are supplemented by other mixtures that are suited to the creation of valuable habitats. ReNatura® gives everyone the ability to do something for the insects and to create valuable biotopes.
